M. Sigalas (Hill International): "Greek infrastructure, a pole of attraction of international business interest"

"Greece has a large 'pool' of executives and beyond the salary, it is important to give them perspective."

By Giannis Pispirigos

"Greece has come a long way. Its image has changed internationally, as the world of infrastructure is accelerating ", as pointed out Mr. Manolis Sigalas, Vice President & CEO of Hill International Southern Europe, during the 2nd day of the ITC 2022 Infrastructure and Transport Conference.

According to Mr. Sigalas, now our country and the infrastructure sector are becoming a pole of attraction of business interest from important companies around the world, as a result of the effort made in the previous period to complete the privatizations and the attraction of foreign capital. Making an assessment for the future, Mr. Sigalas stressed that: "The extroversion of the industry is something that must be worked on now, while alliances are also important. Through work, reliability and know-how we will be able to support projects abroad. Greek youth will have to play a leading role in the international infrastructure in the coming years. "Greece has a large" pool "of executives and in addition to the salary, it is important to give them perspective."
