

A Once-in-a-Generation Chance: Reimagining U.S. Infrastructure

“We have an opportunity in the U.S. to revitalize, reimagine and really revolutionize our buildings and infrastructure,” says Hill International President, Americas, Michael B. Smith. “From roads to airports, from rail to bridges and from schools to public safety facilities, our clients have a generational chance to leverage the new funding available through the Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act to realize their visions for their communities—both those for the long-term and those that have been long-delayed.”

“Of course,” continues Smith, “there are challenges ahead. Supply chain snags, labor shortages and inflation, to name a few. But for each of these challenges, there are solutions available. A partnering approach to procurement, for example, is one best practice that could transfer to our public clients from the private sector, and a customized low-code Program Management Information System can help owners maintain control over their budgets and schedules at any stage of delivery and make smart decisions.”

Smith concludes, “Hill International is ready to be your partner on your infrastructure projects and programs. Our experts across the U.S. have the expertise and experience with precisely the challenges you can expect to encounter — and the solutions to overcome those obstacles. I invite you learn more about how Hill can help you deliver the infrastructure of change.” ♦
